

NEIGHBOURHOOD DESCRIPTION

The Elmwood neighbourhood was originally part of the Town of Jasper Place. Until its annexation by Edmonton in 1964, Jasper Place served as a residential alternative to living in the larger city. It is bounded by Whitemud Drive to the south, 170 Street to the west, 87 Avenue to the north and 159 Street to the east. The neighbourhood was almost entirely developed during the 1960s and most of the structures in Elmwood are single-detached houses.

The schools and a small commercial site are centrally located and adjacent to the collector road. With a freeway and two major arterials forming three of Elmwood's four borders, residents have good access to destinations in the City's west end. The Misericordia Hospital and West Edmonton Mall are immediately to Elmwood's north and northwest.

The neighbourhood was once called West Lynnwood, and in the 1910s the western portion of Elmwood was named Eureka.
