

NEIGHBOURHOOD DESCRIPTION

Lendrum Place is predominately residential in character and most of the properties are developed with single-detached homes, with some apartment dwellings located adjacent to bus routes. The schools and community league site are central to the neighbourhood. A commercial plaza with a variety of businesses is located along 111 Street, and additional shopping facilities are located at nearby Southgate Shopping Centre. The University of Alberta research farm (approximately 160 acres) is located to the west and northwest of the community.

The Lendrum Place road network is a modified grid pattern. The road network connects to other major City road for access, and a LRT line runs along Lendrum's eastern boundary.

This neighbourhood was named in honour of Robert Lendrum, one of Edmonton's early land surveyors. The Lendrum Slough was located nearby, but has long since disappeared and been replaced residential development.
