

NEIGHBOURHOOD DESCRIPTION

Steinhauer is located in south-central Edmonton, and developed during the 1970s. Like many neighbourhoods from this era, Steinhauer is built upon a curvilinear street pattern and the residential lands are oriented around a central school and park site. The neighbourhood is bounded to the north by 34th Avenue, to the east by Calgary Trail, to the south by a utility corridor right-of-way and to the west by 111th Street.

The principal land use in the neighbourhood is residential and the major structure type is the single-detached house. A cluster of row housing complexes is located in the south central portion of the neighbourhood adjacent to the school site. Located nearby is a neighbourhood shopping plaza, the neighbourhood's only commercial land use. Additional retail and service outlets are located nearby at the Southgate Shopping Centre. An LRT Station is also located along 111th Street.

The neighbourhood is named for Henry Bird Steinhauer, an Ojibway missionary hailing from Upper Canada who settled in Alberta during the mid-1800's.